Monthly commentary, November 2025

The global equity market fluctuated in November as the Q3 earnings season wound down. Overall, most companies have been hesitant to provide a firm outlook for 2026 given the uncertainty in the economy with tariffs and geopolitics impacting both business customers and regular consumers. The upcoming conference season offers an opportunity to gain further insight into the thinking of company executives when they present their latest views at investor events. In the commodity space, where SKAGEN Global currently does not hold any energy companies, the oil price continued to fall with the Brent price ending the month at around $63/barrel.

SKAGEN Global outperformed its benchmark index in November. It is encouraging to see that the market may be starting to recognise the latent value that has been building in the fund throughout the year as our well-positioned companies are significantly undervalued in the stock market, in our view.

The fund's top three contributors to absolute return were Alphabet (Google), Waste Management and Aegon. In the tech space, Alphabet has been gaining ground and popularity among investors with solid growth in cloud, enhancement of its Al system Gemini and in-house development of state-of-the-art data server chips. Concerns around the Search business driven by OpenAl and ChatGTP have all but dissipated. Consequently, the stock has doubled over the past 6 months. The largest waste company in the US, Waste Management, climbed back after pulling back in October. The Dutch life insurer Aegon continues its idiosyncratic journey to streamline the firm. We estimate that there is still meaningful capital tied up internally that will be released in coming years. Aegon will host a Capital Markets Day in December to present a strategy update to the investor community.

The three worst contributors were RELX, Thomson Reuters and Microsoft. Both RELX and Thomson Reuters have strong time-tested business models providing proprietary data content and digital tools to a diversified customer base. The two stocks have been weak so far this year as the market seemingly fears that their content will not be as well protected in the AI era. We think this is a gross simplification and would take the other side of the argument, thus proposing that RELX and Thomson Reuters actually will benefit from AI. In fact, these companies have embraced AI technology and rolled out new products and features in the past couple of years. However, the bifurcation in the technology space among perceived AI winners and losers has been pronounced in 2025. But as we noted above in the case of Alphabet (Google), sentiment can shift swiftly with sharp re-ratings of stocks in a matter of months. Microsoft gave back some of its recent gains likely due to profit taking.

Regarding portfolio activity, we will comment on key changes, if any, at the end of the quarter. We continue to allocate capital across the portfolio where we see the best long-term risk-reward profile. With the de-rating that has taken place this year in several holdings, the portfolio looks compellingly undervalued. Our holdings continue to generate earnings and cash flow. To that point, the Q3 earnings reports for the portfolio were largely non-eventful as companies generally delivered results in-line with the financial guidance laid out at the beginning of the year. In terms of the outlook, the macro picture remains murky with inflation not yet going away and the daily barrage of headlines from the White House in the US driving news flow. We believe the undervalued companies in SKAGEN Global are well positioned to navigate this complex environment.

Sustainability

SKAGEN's approach to sustainability

Our ESG approach is built on four pillars. In keeping with SKAGEN's active investment philosophy, our sustainability activities centre on active engagement with our holding companies, which is where we believe we can have the greatest impact. We recognise, however, that the full potential of a sustainable investment strategy is best realised when combining the following four pillars.

✓ Exclusion✓ Enhanced due diligence✓ ESG factsheet✓ Active ownership

Article 8
